WASHINGTON, June 24.-Sinking of an allied transport under American charter on June 18, about 700 miles east of the Delaware capes, was reported today to the navy department. The transport had no troops aboard and was westward bound.

Reports indicate that the submarine was not seen until after the torpedo struck the ship. The crew took to the boats after the vessel settled and it was futile to use the guns. The Uboat appeared on the surface and fired nineteen shots into the ship. Three boats, with about sixty-seven members of the crew are missing. The crew of 148 got away from the vessel in seven boats, four of which have been landed. The total rescued so far is given as $1 men. Two boat loads arrived by steamer at New York; one by steamer at Hampton Roads and one by sailing vessel at Bermuda.

No doubt you have noticed the use of the word "infiltration" in war news lately and wondered what it meant. The dictionary defines the word as "to percolate through pores or interstices," which doesn't help much. 1) Infiltration in the military sense is the strategy by which an army Torces its opponent to retreat at one point by attacking at several others. The above diagram will help to make clear how this is done. The figure 1 is the original battle line, which the attacking army seeks to hurl back without employing a massed frontal attack. therefore strikes at the figures 2 and 3, penetrating the line in the direction of the black triangles. It then throws its men out from both sides of the triangle, bend-ing the opponent's line back at both points of attack, as shown by the

When this is accomplished another attack is launched from the triangle at the figure 5. This envelops the defending army's line and forces it to fall back on the whole front between the two points of attack as far as the line represented by figure 6.

Of course both flanks are forced to retreat simultaneously. This is the new German strategy which is giving signs of replace the massed attacks which have proved so costly.
